Ending a Rooming accommodation agreement

The Residential Tenancies and Rooming Accommodation Act 2008 (the Act) gives rules for ending a Rooming accommodation agreement (Form R18) in rooming accommodation such as boarding houses, hostels, off-campus student accommodation and other rooming style accommodation covered by the Act in Queensland.

Ending a Rooming accommodation agreement (Form R18)

Rooming accommodation agreements (agreements) are legal contracts which can only be ended in accordance with the Act. An agreement can only end where:

- the provider/agent and the resident end the agreement in writing
- the provider/agent gives the resident a Notice to leave – Rooming accommodation (Form R12) – the agreement ends on the day the resident leaves
- the resident gives the provider/agent a Resident leaving form – Rooming accommodation (Form R13) – the agreement ends on the date stated in the notice
- a resident has abandoned their room and their rent has been used up
- a sole resident dies, or
- the Tribunal makes an order terminating the agreement.

If there is a fixed term agreement in place and the term has ended and a Notice to leave – Rooming accommodation or Resident leaving form – Rooming accommodation has not been given, the agreement will continue to operate as a periodic agreement with the same conditions as the original agreement.

How much notice must be given?

The amount of notice required depends upon the reason the agreement is ending.

Reasons for ending an agreement

Agreements can only be ended for reasons allowed under the Act, giving the required notices and time periods.

- Without grounds

If no reason is given for ending the agreement, this is called without grounds.

A provider/agent can end a periodic agreement without grounds by giving at least 30 days notice to the resident. The provider/agent can end a fixed term agreement without grounds only at the end of the term and not less than 14 days after the notice was given.

A resident can end a periodic agreement without grounds by giving at least seven days notice to the provider/agent. The resident can end a fixed term agreement without grounds only at the end of the term and not less than seven days after the notice is given.

- Where there has been a general breach of the agreement

If either the provider/agent or resident has breached a condition of the agreement, a Notice to remedy breach – Rooming accommodation (Form R11) can be issued to the other party. If the problem hasn't been fixed by the due date or has been repeated before the due date, the provider/agent or resident issuing the notice can choose either to ignore the breach and continue the agreement, or to proceed to end the agreement.

If the party chooses to end the agreement because the breach has not been fixed by the due date:

- a provider/agent may issue a Notice to leave – Rooming accommodation, or
- a resident may issue a Resident leaving form – Rooming accommodation.

The provider/agent's Notice to leave – Rooming accommodation must give at least two days notice. The resident's Resident leaving form – Rooming accommodation must give at least seven days notice.

The provider/agent may withdraw the Notice to leave – Rooming accommodation at any time.

- Where there has been a breach for non-payment of rent

When an agreement is to be ended because of rent arrears and the resident hasn't paid the rent by the time indicated on the Notice to remedy breach – Rooming accommodation, the provider/agent can give the resident a Notice to leave – Rooming accommodation.

If the resident has been there for less than 28 days, they can be asked to leave immediately. If they have been a resident for more than 28 days, the Notice to leave – Rooming accommodation must allow at least four days for the resident to leave.

The provider/agent may withdraw the Notice to leave – Rooming accommodation at any time.

- Where there has been a serious breach of the agreement

A provider/agent may give a resident a Notice to leave – Rooming accommodation requiring the resident to leave the premises immediately if they believe the resident has committed a serious breach of the agreement.

This could occur if:

- the resident has used their room or common rooms for an illegal purpose, or
- the resident, or their guest, has:
 - destroyed or seriously damaged a part of the premises
 - endangered another person within the premises, or
 - significantly interfered with the reasonable peace, comfort or privacy of another resident.

- If a sole resident dies

The agreement ends two weeks after a resident's death if no notice is given to the provider/agent by the resident's personal representative or relative, or no notice is given by the provider/agent to the representative or relative.

If a notice is given, the agreement ends seven days after the notice is received or on the day agreed on the notice.

Other reasons for ending an agreement

The Act allows agreements to be ended for other reasons, including:

- non-liveability – the resident or provider/agent can end the agreement if the property is totally or partially destroyed, or can no longer be used as a residence
- end of employment – where the resident occupies rooming accommodation under the terms of employment and that employment ends
- abandoned premises – where the provider/agent believes the resident has abandoned their room and the rent paid has run out, or
- mortgagee in possession – where a mortgagee (such as a bank or financial institution) is to take possession of the premises from the owner

There are rules that must be followed when ending an agreement for these reasons.

Unfair ending of an agreement

An agreement cannot be ended by a provider/agent without grounds because the resident has used their lawful rights such as complaining to a government entity about the actions of a provider/agent.

A resident may lodge a Dispute resolution request (Form 16) with the RTA where they believe a provider/agent has unfairly given them a Notice to leave – Rooming accommodation.

The RTA encourages residents and providers/agents to try to solve problems themselves by talking to each other and finding out about their rights and responsibilities before going to the RTA's dispute resolution service.

Power to remove a resident

If the provider/agent has ended the agreement and the resident refuses to leave the premises, they may use reasonable force to remove the resident and their property, but only in the presence of a police officer.

Applying to the Tribunal

In certain circumstances, residents and providers/agents have the option of applying straight to the Tribunal without using the RTA's dispute resolution service first. This is called an urgent application.

Some applications that are considered urgent are:

- the resident is experiencing excessive hardship (like money problems or a job transfer) and wants to end the agreement before the end date
- the provider/agent or the resident needs an order to stop an agent from causing damage or injury to other people or the premises
- in limited circumstances, where a sole resident dies.

Disputes about rental bonds, notice to leave, resident leaving form, rent arrears or a general disagreement are not considered urgent and the applicant must lodge a Dispute resolution request with the RTA before applying to the Tribunal for a decision.
